A dark, rough calf-skin binding With no bright colored glow: Not much to look at, truly; You wonder I prize it so.

In its and honest covering True strength seems clearly expresse! And though dim by you modern glitter, I love it of all the best-

Not only because God's glory Gleams out in its every page, And man may find light and refreshment Through life's drear pilgrimage:

Not only that here the God-Man, On His rood of wondroes love, Draws the hearts of His humble children To His heaven of peace above:

These are awful themes; but simpler The thoughts that thickly twine Rrund thee, old Book, when I ponder O'ver the days of sweet Lang Syne: When the lights had been duly lit,

Did I with my mother sit, And pore o'er these vivid pictures Of Cain, and the Deluge, with dread, And the climax was reached in David With grim Goliath's head.

In pure and innocent childhood

Just as now you are looking, my Alice, Sitting here so closely by me, Did I muse o'er these self-same pictures On my gentle mother's knee. And I love it for all its blessings

Any for this, too, none the less,

The voice of her lovingness.

That it seems to enshrine 'tween its pages

So keep the Old Book with affection, Alice, and when thou'rt alone, And thy mother has gone to the far land 'Twill speak with a mother's tone. -Sunday at Home.
